"Avengers: Infinity War" flies into theaters April 27. MARVEL STUDIOS

'Infinity War' shows reality through fiction, says Joe Russo

The director says that although he and his brother base the movies on the comics, they prioritize their interpretation, and do not fear criticism.

PATRICIA CARRANZA MWN

Brothers Anthony and Joe Russo have managed to establish themselves as Marvel's favorite directors with films like "Captain America: The Winter Soldier" and "Captain America: Civil War," which is the reason why they were chosen to direct one of the most anticipated crossovers of recent times, "Avengers: Infinity War." They're also preparing "Avengers 4," which will be released next year.

According to Joe, one of the main messages of the film is to show the complexity of being a superhero in a world with too many conflicts. "Which is not far from reality," says the filmmaker.

During the promotional tour, Joe chatted with Metro and confessed how he doesn't get nervous with Marvel comic fans' criticism, since he and his brother have always made it clear that these films are based on their interpretation.

How has your life changed since joining the Marvel world?

A lot, many opportunities have opened up for my brother and I and we have continued working in this business because we love it. We have grown a lot, now we can focus on assisting other film directors to make their films and we really enjoy it. Marvel has also allowed us to have control over their characters and that is a dream that I never thought I could achieve as a filmmaker.

What's the message this movie wants to send?

The main message is to show what it is to be a hero in such a complicated world, which is not far from reality and I think that is what "Infinity War" does, it shows reality through fiction. So, it's a very entertaining movie but at the same time very intense because Thanos is a very powerful villain.

How do you create a balance between the comic and the movie?

My brother and I have always been very clear when we work on these films, we are not interested in making comic book adaptations. Comics always have their characters and their events that are consistent for the comic but not for the film, so we try to be very cautious in the Marvel film world. I think it is very important to take ideas from the comic but not be 100 percent based on it. So, we have always been very honest about it and we only show our interpretation of the story.

Mark Ruffalo still can't believe he's in 'Avengers: Infinity War'

He was sure they'd have recast him by now. GREGORY WAKEMAN

Unlikely super hero, Mark Ruffalo. MARVEL STUDIOS

It's easy to dismiss and overlook just how astounding the success of the Marvel Cinematic Universe has been.

While most other origin stories immediately stumble, and every new Star Wars and DC release proves to be divisive, all 18 Marvel films have found an audience and enhanced the seemingly unstoppable worlds in which they live.

OK, 2008's "The Incredible Hulk" was the only blip. But a huge positive event emerged from that misstep, as Marvel made the wise and prescient decision to replace Ed Norton with Mark Ruffalo as Bruce Banner, who has become a huge fan favorite.

I recently had the chance to talk to Ruffalo about the Hulk, "Avengers: Infinity War" and the impact that Marvel has had on the movie industry and his own career.

Did you think the Marvel Cinematic Universe would get to this level when you joined?

Honestly I was like, "OK, they'll have me for this. But that will be it. They'll end up recasting it like they like to do so much." I'm just completely in shock that I keep getting asked back, and that people still want to see it.

How do you see Bruce Banner and the Hulk's role in the Marvel Cinematic Universe?

Limited. And perfectly in match to what's happening right now. I think he's a great accoutrement to the universe. But they feel like they've tried to do the spin-off and there just wasn't enough there by himself.

Did you agree with that?

I felt like we could do more. I feel like, in the last three movies we gave him a proper arc that feels like it could have been stuffed into one movie. I would love to have seen a stand-alone movie at some point. But that looks like it isn't on the cards. But I'm happy with the way it went. It's a lot of pressure to be the guy. I feel like I get to reap all of the benefits without any of the down sides.

What should Marvel learn from the success of Black Panther?

Diversity. Diversity. Diversify. I think the writing is on the wall there. And it has been for some time.

CRAFT

I think with Marvel it's been interesting, because they have sort of keyed into the zeitgeist and the moment. All of their movies have a social or political message that's appropriate to the time we're living in. The human brain hardwires the mythology and it accepts it very, very quickly — those kind of stories. I do think that it's become this sort of modern mythology, where we're working out these bigger issues through fantastical means that are really, really accessible to people.

What did working with Marvel do to your career, away from the franchise?

We have to be honest with that kind of question. Because what's the system that we're working under? It's totally dictated by box office. You could be a great actor, but if your movie doesn't make money they don't ask you back. My agent was telling me the other day, "You are in four of the top 10 highest-grossing box office movies in history." Which is crazy. Because I've had home-less anxiety for most of my life. So they give you a chance to do things in a system that generally really rewards that monetary success. "Avengers: Infinity War" opens April 27.

Ink up at the 17th annual Boston Tattoo Convention this weekend

Admire all the different ways the human body can become a canvas. SHIRLEY WANG

When the Boston Tattoo Convention comes back to town this weekend, organizer Natan Alexander says he'll be getting inked by Master Ajarn Ohr, a tattoo artist flying in from Thailand. Ohr specializes in Sak Yant tattoos, which are sacred markings written in the Khmer language.

Ohr is just one of the 400 plus artists coming in from all over the world for a weekend of live music and plenty of neo-gothic grunge. The programming includes the crowning of Miss Boston Ink Beauty Contest and Sunday's "Ink-illusionist" performance with the Synstr Mr. Syxx and the Diabolical Dr. SeVeN, described by Alexander as "a classic carnival sideshow sort of pair of twins."

Throughout the convention, participants are invited to book reservations with incoming artists and get tattooed right in the Center. Inkers are required to apply for a license with the Boston

Public Health Commission, take a blood-borne pathogens training and bring Body Art permits from their respective states or countries. The convention's long-standing collaboration with the Commission since its origin 17 years ago, assures that the process is safe, according to Alexander.

"There's a screening that happens behind the scene that makes sure that everyone there is tall enough to ride the ride," Alexander jokes.

In the months leading up to the event, the Boston Tattoo Convention Instagram account has been inviting artists to do "Instagram takeovers," where tattoo artists post about their designs. Alexander wants the event to be as much of a celebration of artistry, and encourages viewers to come even if they don't want a tattoo.

"The convention is first and foremost an art show," Alexander says. "It's not really a crazy wild like biker kind of event. I've been told that the venues that I work with have had crazier times with insurance salesmen conventions."

Your guide to ArtWeek 2018

Enjoy fancy bites, spend a night in Wakanda and more at this 10-day fest. SHIRLEY WANG

Tech meets art at this year's festivities. ALL PHOTOS PROVIDED

When ArtWeek began in 2013, organizers at the Highland Street Foundation had no idea their plans would eventually include over 530 events in six regions of Massachusetts. The festival's size has doubled since last year.

"Not only does ArtWeek provide hundreds of free and affordable creative events, it also spotlights the rich cultural community that exists across Massachusetts," says Josiah Spaulding, president of the Boch Center.

With so much to see and just 10 days to do it all, we've handpicked some of our favorites to drop by. Here are nine events you don't want to miss when ArtWeek returns this weekend.

WHAT TO SEE

Chinatown Mural Tour

The newest mural in Chinatown Phillips Square has images of dim sum, garment factories from the 1900s and the MBTA orange line. It's an artistic response to increasing housing prices and the displacement of long-time Chinatown businesses and residents. See this mural plus other public art installments that tell the history behind this Boston neighborhood.

April 28, 10:30 a.m. - 11:30 a.m., China Trade Building, 2 Boylston St., $15, chsne.org

ARLines of the City

Join Brazilian artist Giovanna Casimiro at the Greenway Conservancy for a mind-bending demonstration of augmented reality. If you bring your phone or tablet, you'll be able to view Casimiro's virtual display of murals from her home city of Sao Paulo staged around the park.

April 28, 2 p.m. - 3 p.m. and May 4, 5:30 p.m. - 6:30 p.m., Rose Kennedy Greenway Conservancy Essex St., free, bostoncyberarts.org

Arts Technica

Technology and the experimental arts interact in this one-off exhibit. Test out "All The Pardons," an app that instructs people on when they should get off their phone, or immerse yourself in a virtual experience of powerful emotions like grief and anger through EmotiVR. May 3, 5:30 - 8:30 p.m., CIC Boston, 50 Milk St., free, cicartsweek.splashthat.com

90-Second Newbery Film Festival

There's no youth version of the Oscars, but this festival comes pretty close. Watch 90-second videos from young filmmakers with their takes on classic books like "A Wrinkle in Time" and "From the Mixed-Up Files of Mrs. Basil E. Frankweiler." April 28, 2 p.m. - 4 p.m., Boston Public Library, 700

Boylston St., free, 90secondnewbery.com

Sneaker Museum pop-up exhibit

Since the '80s, Rick Kosow has amassed 1,000 of some of the most coveted sneakers of all time, 800 of which are pairs of Nike Air Jordans. He probably won't let you try them on, but you can ask Kosow about his obsession yourself at a meet and greet on May 2 from 5:30 - 7 p.m.

April 27 - May 6, Royal Sonesta Boston, 40 Edwin H Land Blvd., Cambridge, free, sneakermuseum.com

Take an enforced long weekend around a campfire with other grown-ups. In addition to having fun, you're sure to learn a lot. ALL PHOTOS FROM ISTOCK

Adult Summer Camp is a real (important) thing

Expand your mind and network outdoors — while enjoying an open bar.

KARL SAINT LUCY
letters@metro.us

Being a grownup can be a bummer. When we were kids, we got summers off—now that we've traded the academic year for a 401(k), vacation days are carefully meted out and we usually have to cash them in on visits to family. If you're feeling stressed, check out adult summer camp. Friendship bracelets, capture-the-flag and bug juice by the bonfire are givens, but the camps on our list have activities to engage the adult in you, too.

Camp No Counselors

As seen on ABC's "Shark Tank," Camp No

Counselors rents out camp spaces all over the country — including Boston and New York — to bring to life its motto, "Play like a kid, party like a grownup!" to fun-starved adults all summer. Partying is the core of Camp No Counselors — campers get to enjoy an open bar for all four days of their abbreviated summer break. Breakfast includes a Bloody Mary and mimosa bar, and nighttime involves lots of theme parties. Beyond partying, campers can get into stuff like sailing, blobbing and zip lining.

Registration fees range from $450-$675, and cover accommodations, meals, activities, parties and drinks. See campnocounselors.com for more information.

Club Getaway

An hour-and-a-half from New York City and three-and-a-half-hour drive from Boston, in the Connecticut Berkshires, Club Getaway will "spoil you rotten and help you indulge in a weekend of adventure" four days at a time throughout the summer. Each weekend provides a different experience — Memorial Day, Young Professionals, Camp Out (LGBT) and Gen X-themed weekends are all on the menu for 2018. Activities include all the usuals, plus improv, mixology, burlesque and more. As far as alcohol goes, only wine is included with the registration fee, but guests can front an additional $100 for an all-inclusive "Cheers Package" for drinks. NYC residents can get to Club Getaway for $65 round-trip on the Getaway Bus.

Registration fees range from $400-$500 — depending on the weekend — and cover accommodations, housekeeping, meals, wine with dinner, activities, entertainment and parties. Call (800) 643-8292, email info@clubgetaway.com, or visit clubgetaway.com/camp-for-adults/ for more information.

Hog Island Audubon Camp

Bird lovers — or twitchers-in-training — will love the five-day camps at Hog Island Audubon Camp. The camp is part of the Todd Wildlife Sanctuary, a 90-minute drive from Portland, Maine. Programs include the Joy of Birding (June 3-8), Field Ornithology (June 17-22) and Raptor Rapture (July 8-13).

Standard room accommodations are $1,145 and include meals, housing, instruction and all boat trips. Deluxe accommodations are available. Scholarships may be available through your local Audubon chapter or bird club. For more information, email hogisland@audubon.org, call (843) 340-8673, or visit hogisland.audubon.org.

There are plenty of ways to treat your inner kid to some time away while still feeling like an adult — these are just a few options. However you spend your summer as a grownup, make sure you engage your mind and make time for fun.

How to future-proof your career

Use this summer to step up your game when it comes to knowledge, skills and an awareness of your next step (be it more schooling, courses or something else entirely).

LUCY E. COUSINS
letters@metro.us

Even if you're not looking to move on from your current role just yet, it pays to be prepared. Especially as according to a recent study from Oxford University, nearly 50 percent of all jobs, as we know them today, are likely to be eliminated by technology within the next 20 years. So how do you make sure you're never out of a job? By future-proofing your career. Often.

Expand your network

Take summer downtime to set yourself up for your next big step. ISTOCK

base

There's nothing more important in your career than the people you meet along the way. It doesn't matter what industry you're in; making connections with those around you, but more important, those above you, is a critical step toward being considered for your next role. Recommendations are career currency, so if you're able to impress your potential future boss before they advertise the role, even better.

Up-skill regularly

We're not saying that you need to go back to college, but learning is a life-long skill, especially as it's estimated that 1 million Americans will see their occupations vanish by 2026. However, you don't have to spend a fortune on courses when there are free online offerings through websites like EDX and Open2Study.

Accessible to anyone, these courses are run by some of the world's best universities. Choose one related to your industry and start studying!

Be flexible

According to a report from the World Economic Forum, the average young American will hold at least seven jobs in their career lifetime. So being able to recognize new opportunities when they arise (even though you might be ready to move on) is important. That way you'll never outgrow your role or your company.

Get tech-savvy

You don't need to know how to code your own website, but you do need to understand the concepts behind how technology affects your given career. What programs do you need a working knowledge of for your next step up?

Being tech-savvy also extends to your experience with computer systems and social media. In the future, it's predicted that nearly every job will have some element of technology attached to it, so it's a good idea to understand more than just the basics.

Create your brand

Having your own brand isn't just for celebrities. Presenting your best self online, on platforms such as LinkedIn or your own website, is one way to make sure you're noticed by your next employer. And it's a good chance to "brand" yourself for your next role now. Do you know you'll need a particular skill for a promotion? Learn it and promote it far and wide on your profile. And don't forget to leave out any peripheral roles or experience. Make your résumé concise so it stands out immediately.

Launch your healthcare career

Online, accredited certificates you can complete in 1 year or less

Some of today's most in-demand healthcare jobs are in technology, not patient care, and require a certificate:

- (CDI) Clinical Documentation Improvement
- Intraoperative Neuromonitoring
- Medical Coding
- Neurodiagnostic Technology

High school dropouts still make it to college

NerdWallet is a personal finance website.

While 1 in 20 students leave high school without a diploma, in time, nearly half of them find their way back to a classroom. Work, children, financial pressures and hard life lessons provide dropouts with different perspectives when they decide to choose a path to a degree. Meet two who have gotten back on track.

Online college and life balance

Christopher Banks dropped out of high school when he was 16. Shortly afterward, he witnessed a car accident. At the scene, he hit it off with an EMT who took him under her wing and

You may have left the classroom once. Consider this a second chance at a degree. iStock talked him into changing his life.

"She forced me to go back to school and paid for everything," Banks says.

He started with a high school equivalency exam, then a paramedic's certificate and an associate degree in nursing. Now, at 42, he's on his way to a bachelor's degree in nursing at Arizona State University Online.

When looking for an online program, Banks was careful about finding the right fit.

"I can still work full time and have a life outside of school and work," says Banks, who is financing his education through a mix of federal student loans. He expects to earn his bachelor's degree in May and plans to take his nursing career abroad to work at embassies.

A chance for academic validation

Community college can offer a second-chance for high school dropouts, like Menachem "Mendy" Green, 21, of Monsey, New York, who dropped out of his high school within the Yeshiva system of private traditional Jewish schools when he was 16.

"I thought I was stupid," says Green, who works as a trip manager at Shabbat.com. "I wanted to prove to myself somehow that I am capable."

Green learned about a 24-credit program in which students take college courses while earning their high school equivalency at Rockland Community College. It took a couple of failed entrance exams followed by tutoring and remedial classes, but he got in.

Green earned his high school equivalency diploma and is working toward an associate degree in business management.

Going to college is helping Green move past his previous negative experiences in school. "I want to show any teacher who yelled at me for not doing my homework or who failed me: Watch me do this," he says. "Watch me become successful."

Stakes are high and odds are long

Completing a postsecondary program isn't easy for those who return to earn their high school equivalency diplomas, but the payoff is worth it.

Among GED diploma holders, only 12% are likely to complete a postsecondary program within six years of passing the equivalency exam, according to the American Council on Education, which administers the GED test.

Students who complete a college program have the potential for higher median earnings over their lifetime, according to research by Georgetown University's Center for Education and the Workforce. The more education, the better off they'll be. ANNA HELIOSKI

Summer break? Not really. Time to prep.

This is a once-in-a-lifetime chance to get ready to take your next big step. Don't blow it — but be sure to still have some fun. KARL SAINT LUCY

High school is going by fast. College is just around the corner, and the summer is a huge, open field of possibility. You've been looking forward to bumming around on the couch watching "Riverdale" and snacking, but could your time be better spent on college preparation?

College prep doesn't have to be scary or boring. Catch these tips—you could end up having the best summer of your life.

Read, read, read

Read from your recommended list for next year, take a look at next year's textbooks, invest in cultivating speed-reading skills, because one thing's for sure — you're going to be completely overwhelmed by the pages you're meant to compute your first year in Big Kid School. Do anything you can to get your nose in some books, because you'll need to be practiced and disciplined at reading if you want to do well in college. Even reading for pleasure will keep your brain in top shape for learning.

Contribute to society

Deliver pizzas, file tax stuff for your mom, teach seniors about filters on SnapChat ... there are endless fun ways to carve out a place for yourself in the big, wide world while you're waiting for school to start again. If you find yourself stumped, check out resources like Habitat for Humanity, TeenLife, or Philadelphia Youth Network to find out about volunteer opportunities in your area.

Spot school-supply deals

You'll have to start doing your own shopping pretty soon, and probably on a shoestring budget. Get in the habit of looking for bargains now — you'll get practice taking care of yourself and your parents will appreciate the help.

Take a summer course

One of the best ways to prep for college is to take a college course. Boston University's Summer Term program gives high school students the opportunity to "immerse [themselves] in college academics and campus life, open [their] minds to new subjects, bond with high school students from around the country and globe, and experience summer in beautiful Boston." But Boston University isn't the only college that has programs that offer the college experience, academic challenge, and new friends to high school students—Temple University, Boston Architectural College, and NYU have great programs worth checking out.

Hang out

College isn't all work and no play. You'll get to meet friends and start new adventures in college, but you still deserve to have fun with the friends you already have. Give yourself a break — go on a road trip, hop on a train, or walk down to your favorite fro-yo place. You don't have to spend money to cultivate friendship, either — plus, you'll be doing your own mental health a favor.

There are tons of ways to have a cool, productive summer — get creative! You'll walk onto your future college campus having earned the kick in your step.

Dive into this colorful 'recipe' of symbols

HOMAGE TO THE DYEING INDUSTRY

Imabari City in Ehime Prefecture, Japan, is famous for its high-quality towel production. The land is blessed with good-quality water, which has led to an accumulation of excellent dyeing techniques. This was the inspiration for architect Emmanuelle Moureaux's recent exhibit "1000 COLORS RECIPE," which visually conveys Imabari's dyeing technology and a new world of colors that no one has ever seen. MWN

Seniors and low-income homeowners in Boston who may be "house rich, cash poor" can fall behind on property taxes, Boston City Councilor Lydia Edwards said in a release. PIXABAY

Boston city councilor wants to help residents repay back taxes

Boston City Councilor Lydia Edwards has called for a hearing to help residents pay their back taxes.

Seniors and low-income homeowners in Boston who may be "house rich, cash poor" can fall behind on property taxes, she said in a release, and then face a "hurdle" trying to catch up.

The city of Boston does offer payment plans for back taxes, according to Edwards, but they require a large down payment and have a year time limit, so they can still burden some residents. Homeowners who cannot repay their back taxes within one year face the risk of foreclosure.

But there's more that Boston can, and should do, according to Edwards. She is pushing for the city to extend the length of tax repayment and to forgive a portion of interest on back taxes so these residents are able to stay in their homes.

"As city agencies work to stabilize our communities and address the many housing and economic challenges we face, we should use all tools at our disposal to prevent crisis scenarios before they start," she said in a statement. "Offering another tool to seniors and low-income homeowners on repayment of late taxes is one simple step we could take to prevent foreclosures and allow residents facing economic challenges to stay in place."

State law gives cities and towns the option to extend repayment of property taxes from one year to up to five, Edwards noted, and to forgive up to half of the interest.

"Today, too many elderly and low-income

Boston residents face increasing property tax bills that they cannot afford," said Todd S. Kaplan, senior attorney of Greater Boston Legal Services, in a statement. "By offering these residents more flexible payment plans to pay their back taxes with the opportunity to reduce accrued interest, we can help homeowners get current on their taxes and take real steps to ensuring Boston is a city for people of all ages and income levels."

Mayor Marty Walsh awards $100K in grants to immigrant groups in Boston

Immigrant-led organizations that help that community in Boston have received a funding boost from Mayor Marty Walsh.

KRISTIN TOUSSAINT
 kristin.toussaint@metro.us

Mayor Marty Walsh has awarded $100,000 total to 10 immigrant organizations as an investment into those members of the city's community.

Walsh announced the grants, which disperse the $100,000 among multiple immigrant-led and immigrant-serving groups, through the Mayor's Office for Immigrant Advancement on Wednesday.

"Boston is a city that welcomes all residents, and works to lift up every family and individual in our city," he said in a statement. "Lifting up everyone includes our immigrant communities — I'm proud these grants will help improve lives here in the City of Boston, and give all residents an opportunity to succeed."

The 10 nonprofits will help Boston immigrants through services like welcoming and supporting evacuees from recent natural disasters, organizing and hosting immigration legal screening clinics and conducting family preparedness education workshops.

Walsh has repeatedly said that immigrants are important to the fabric of the city, and a 2017 report cited the immigrant community here as a driving force behind Boston's population and workforce growth since 1980.

Immigrants compose 28.4 percent of Boston residents, a total of about 190,123 people foreign-born people, according to Boston Planning and Development Agency data.

"The past few months have been very difficult for all immigrants living in this country, and particularly for those affected by the elimination of their Temporary Protected Status," said Gerald Gabeau, executive director at Immigrant Family Services Institute, in a statement.

"With this hostile environment, demands for services have risen exponentially," he continued. "Most of us community leaders have been called to respond to this crisis with no resources. This mini-grant is a great way to start putting in place the infrastructure needed to support our immigrant community."

Orbiting 101: The dating phenomenon that you knew about all along

The dating world comes with many things: heart-break, awkward online profiles, one-night stands, cheap two-for-one deals at restaurants ... the works. And even if you are happily in a relationship (guilty) or taking a break from the dating scene (understandable), you've heard of ghosting. As one Metro designer related to me, "It honestly sucks, and it's so baffling! Sometimes you really think things are going so well and everything is clicking, but then all of a sudden no answer." Sound familiar? Now there's a word for when you're ghosted but that ghoster still relentlessly creeps on your social feeds: orbiting.

Why does orbiting happen?

The same Metro co-worker came to the conclusion that, like so many others, she's unknowingly been a victim of orbiting: "This guy ghosted me and then never unfollowed me, still liked my pics, and then all of a sudden, out of the blue, contacted me again explaining why he ghosted."

But she wasn't sure why it happened. "Was [it] that he still found me attractive but didn't want the pressure of dating [or] starting a relationship? Sheer laziness of making plans?"

Man Repeller writer Anna Iovine, who coined the term, says there are three reasons for orbiting.

Motive No. 1: Orbiting to exert power

Orbiters want you to know they're looking because keeping friendly ties with you gives them some sort of power. Or — and this may just be my cynicism talking — the power move is in place to manipulate you, to push you to contact them.

WHAT IS ORBITING?

As Elite Daily noted, the term was created by Man Repeller writer Anna Iovine. She picked this word because, well, it describes the situation perfectly: they're "keeping you in their orbit." This means you're "close enough to see each other; far enough to never talk."

Motive No. 2: Orbiting by accident

Orbiters could be doing all this unintentionally, perhaps because they aren't aware that you can see them looking at your social media (i.e. Snapchat and Instagram stories).

Motive No. 3: Orbiting because of FOMO

Orbiters might also keep tabs on you in case they want to pursue you in the future.

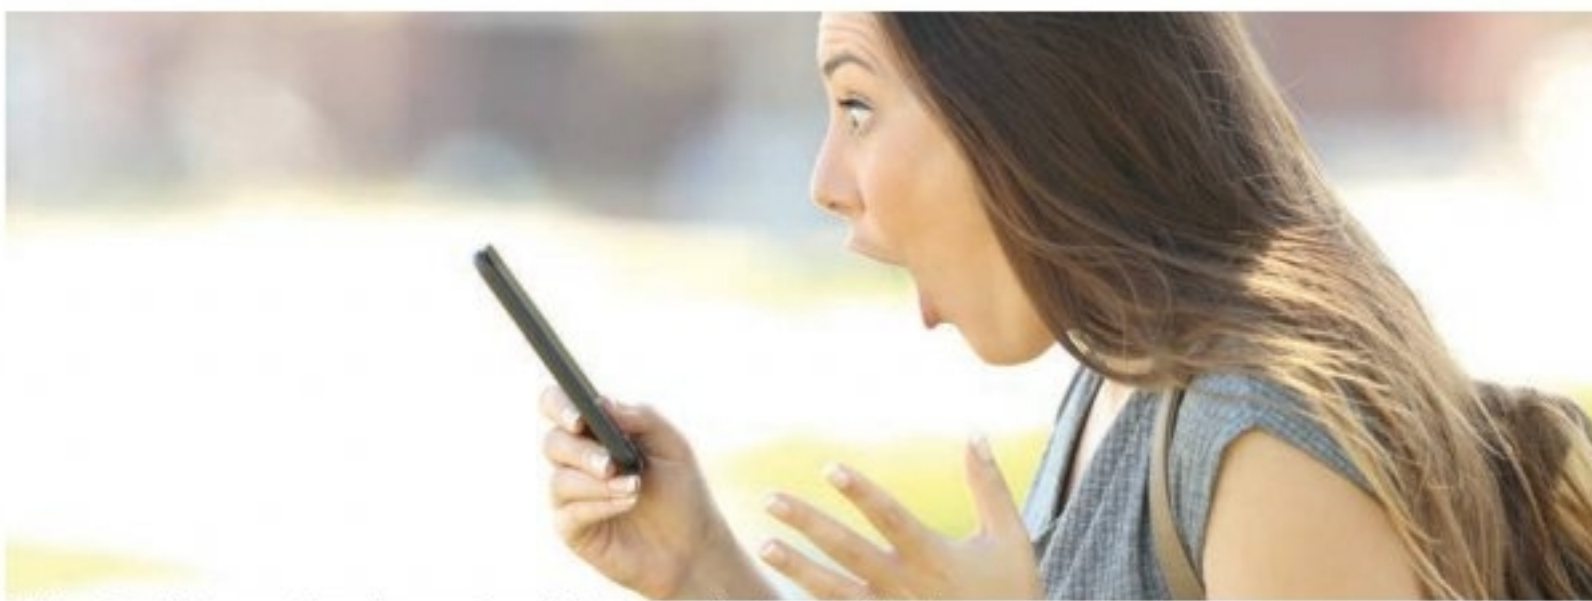

"Part of this orbiting behavior is really related to the underlying FOMO [fear of missing out]," licensed professional clinical counselor Dr. Rachel O'Neill told Man Repeller. "There's a concern that if they were to completely eliminate contact with you, then they might miss the opportunity to reconnect with you later on."

Orbiting and social media

Social media, with its constant flow of information, makes it easy to orbit others.

As O'Neill said, "If circumstances change (for example, the orbiter decides they want to pursue a relationship), the orbiting behavior also offers a relatively easy entry to return back into your life (i.e., commenting on a post, DMing)."

10 Reasons to see the Kentucky
Derby

Pack your biggest hat, racing fans! ALL IMAGES COURTESY OF THE KENTUCKY DERBY FESTIVAL

While the Kentucky Derby lasts only two minutes, The Derby Festival is two weeks of gaudy hats and mint juleps.

Fodor'sTravel

The fireworks

The annual Derby Festival kicks off with a bang, literally, at Thunder Over Louisville, the largest annual fireworks display in North America and the official start to the festival. Although the fireworks don't start until 9 p.m., most locals head to the Ohio River waterfront in the morning to enjoy a full day of festivities leading up to the show. Highlights include a spine-tingling air show throughout the day and every type of fried food imaginable.

Insider tip: The cheapest way to watch the fireworks is with a tent, a blanket, and some folding chairs right on the waterfront, along with thousands of other locals!

The eats

The food in Louisville is amazing year-round, but during Derby Season, it's especially good. For a fancy and traditional meal, head to the historic Jack Fry's or beautiful Buck's in Louisville's prettiest neighborhood, Old Louisville. Looking for something a little less fancy and a little more fried? The Chow Wagon serves up fairground fare on the waterfront during the Derby Festival. Can't decide what you want? Sample it all at Taste of Derby.

You can't leave town without trying Derby Pie. Though its inventors are famously obsessed with guarding their legally protected creation (they're usually only sold frozen in grocery stores), you can find imitations all over Louisville during Derby season. Just ask for something like chocolate pecan pie and wink a lot.

The drinks

Bourbon — the sweet, amber-colored, vanilla-scented whiskey — is as quintessentially Kentucky as the Derby. Try a taste at one of the many stops on the Urban Bourbon Trail, a collection of bars in Louisville which offer over 50 varieties of bourbon. Order the official drink of the Kentucky Derby, the mint julep; or try an Old Fashioned, the official cocktail of Louisville.

The tours

Just outside of Louisville is the Kentucky countryside, dotted with grazing horses and intersected with winding roads. Late spring turns the rolling Kentucky hills a lush, buzzing green, and there's no better time to take a day trip to tour a bourbon distillery. Woodford Reserve is the official bourbon of the Kentucky Derby. No time for a day trip? Head with one of the gaudiest, enormous, and beautiful hats you can find. You can pick up Derby-appropriate headwear at Revelry Gallery, a boutique featuring creations made by local Louisville artists. The Kentucky Derby Museum also sells a colorful array of Derby hats, which is a great excuse to visit the tracks and learn about the history of Churchill Downs.

The party

No Kentucky Derby is complete without a down-home Derby Party. If you're short on local friends, the next best thing is the Hillbilly Outfield, a two-day shindig complete with lawn games, camping and live music. You can also head to the waterfront during the week of Derby for Fest-A-Ville. The festival on the banks of the Ohio River includes live music, fried food, and a series of exciting events including Neigh-Maste, the Ken-Ducky Derby, and the Derby Pun-Writing Championship. Bonus points if you can guess which one of those events is made up.

The Steamboat Race along the Ohio River to Angel's Envy, a bourbon distillery located in the heart of downtown Louisville.

The fashion

Seersucker suits, cocktail dresses and ridiculously large, overly decorated hats: Derby Fashion is half the fun of Derby Season! Get inspired by the Macy's Spring Fashion Show, and then don your Sunday best and accessorize

The parade

The Pegasus Parade has marched through downtown Louisville since 1956, making it the Derby Festival's first and oldest event. You can catch the action from the dogwood-lined streets of Broadway. Keep an eye out for the

The steamboats

The Ohio River, and the steamboats that traversed her muddy banks, are as much a part of Louisville's colorful history as the Derby. Relive that history on The Belle of Louisville, who has graced Louisville with her bright red paddle wheel since 1914. Today, the Belle of Louisville typically hosts guests for dinners, evening cruises and events. But during the Derby Festival, she gears up for The Great Steamboat Race. For over 50 years, two historic steamboats have raced down the Ohio River in the most exciting 20-or-so minutes in boat-racing. Board the Belle or her opponent, the Belle of Cincinnati, to experience the action front and center. Or, you can watch the race from the waterfront.

The celebrities

During Derby Week, celebrities from the A-list to the H-list flock to Derby City to party in style (or, in Jennifer Lawrence's case, to visit her hometown). Rub elbows at Unbridled Eve or at The Barnstable Brown Gala, the most star-studded event of the season. Hosted by the Doublemint Twins (yes, really), a ticket costs over $1,000. Not quite on a celebrity budget? Just pick a party and head to the venue to watch the red carpet festivities from outside!

Insider tip: Many celebrities will be staying at 21C Museum Hotel or The Brown Hotel, two of the most famous accommodations in Louisville. Stop by either for brunch and you might just catch a few hungover celebrities hiding behind oversized sunglasses.

The races

The most exciting two minutes of sports may be the main attraction of the season at Churchill Downs, but it's certainly not the only race. If you want to soak up the excitement of the races without the price tag (or the crowds), you can visit Churchill Downs all week long on a general admission ticket. The stakes are a lot lower, but the drinks are just as good — and there will still be plenty of fabulous giant hats. Most locals go to Thurbby or the Kentucky Oaks rather than the actual Derby, anyway.

During the week leading up to the Derby, head to Churchill Downs early to catch the morning workouts during Dawn at the Downs. Afterwards, pop across the street to Wagner's Pharmacy for a bite to eat. Since 1922, this historic diner has been serving down-home meals and selling jockey silks.

North America's largest fireworks display (take that, NYE).

Metro's final NFL Mock Draft

The big day is here. Just hours before the start of the 2018 NFL Draft, Metro predicts each team's pick in the first round.

It's apparently down to Allen and Baker Mayfield for the top pick, but the Wyoming product has a cannon of an arm and all the intangibles needed to succeed in the NFL. It's too much to pass up, especially after a monstrous showing at his pro day in which he was lobbing up absolute bombs that travelled around 70 yards in the air. Last year's numbers aren't going to jump off the page, but if put in the right system, Allen can thrive. It remains to be seen if Allen would start immediately should he be drafted by Cleveland after the Browns picked up Tyrod Taylor last month.

The Browns drafting a quarterback gives the Giants a chance to draft a generational talent in the backfield. Barkley is the best overall prospect in this year's class and will flourish in the Big Apple. This is a back who can rip open a defense on the ground or can catch with a reliable set of hands out of the backfield.

Even with Sam Darnold and Josh Rosen available, the Jets have been high on Mayfield for the better part of the last month. He is a flat-out gamer and was the best pure passer in the nation last year on his way to a Heisman Trophy. He will redshirt his rookie season behind Josh McCown and Teddy Bridgewater.

With Barkley off the board, the Browns will round out their defensive line with the best pass-rushing talent available. Chubb is an absolute force coming off the edge and will create a vaunted duo with Myles Garrett. Last season was his finest in college with 10 sacks and 23 tackles for a loss.

I have the Bills trading up into the top-five with the Broncos, who reportedly have made the pick available. Buffalo is desperate for a quarterback after trading away Tyrod Taylor and might have the best one in the draft fall into their laps given Cleveland and the Jets' interest in Allen and Mayfield. There were concerns surrounding his turnover issues, but his strong pro day in a torrential downpour only helped his stock.

Celtics look to close out Bucks tonight

The 76ers await in the second round of the Eastern Conference playoffs.

JIMMY TOSCANO
sports@metro.us

With momentum and health (relatively speaking, of course) back on their side, the Celtics are in Milwaukee for tonight's Game 6 against the Bucks.

The hope is that their return trip home will be filled with thoughts of the Philadelphia 76ers and a Game 1 back in Boston.

After losing two in Milwaukee to even up the series, the Celtics looked like a much more competitive team in Game 5, Marcus Smart's return after missing the last 15 regular season games and first four playoff games.

Whether it was diving for those 50-50 loose balls, getting out on the break, or limiting Bucks superstar Giannis Antetokounmpo, the C's jumped out to an early double-digit lead and staved off a late Bucks run to take a pivotal 3-2 series lead.

One thing we've all seen in this series so far: As important as Antetokounmpo is, he can't do it all himself. Bucks sharpshooter Khris Middleton has been just that, a sharpshooter — and basically the only one on that team. But the rest of the Bucks? A mixed bag of inconsistent play.

Many thought that if the C's allowed Antetokounmpo to get his, they could limit the rest of his team and still succeed. That's been true to an extent, but on the random game where a player like Eric Bledsoe looks somewhat competent, or Thon Maker turns into Hakeem Olajuwon, you run into problems.

But in Game 5, the C's inserted strong defender Semi Ojeleye into the starting lineup, moved Al Horford to center, and got 25 minutes out of Marcus Smart off the bench. The result? Just ten field goal attempts from Antetokounmpo, who finished with 16 points.

You can bet the Bucks will look to get him involved more tonight, while the C's work to prevent it.

"I think [Antetokounmpo] gets bodied quite a bit," Bucks head coach Joe Prunty said. "I'm concerned about how much they're pushing. I want him to keep attacking, regardless of how physical the game may be, but in the grand scheme of things, I'll just say it's on all of us."

The Celtics did not look particularly good in either of their two losses in Milwaukee. OK, they looked downright putrid in Game 3 and rather uninspiring until it was too late in Game 4. But they also didn't have Smart. His style of play is contagious, and you could see how the C's responded in Game 5.

"It's why you can't — like you can look at stat sheets all you want; with Marcus it just doesn't tell the story," Celtics head coach Brad Stevens said. "It's — it's his energy, it's his emotion, it's little plays that turn out to be game-changing plays like diving on the floor and flipping it to Al. The blocks, you know coming over when Shabazz Muhammad was really rolling and going up vertically and challenging his shot, making him miss. Like, those are huge plays."

With Kyrie Irving out, the C's need more plays like that from Smart if they want to close out the series tonight. An elimination game brings on the added pressure not brought on by themselves and the opponent. So how does the mentality change in a closeout game?

Boston has to hold down Giannis Antetokounmpo to move on. GETTY IMAGES

"It doesn't. We have the same mentality we have [Tuesday night]," Smart said. "Only difference is we have part of our team back with me here and we have a little momentum and confidence that we didn't have in those last two games. Nothing changes. Our mentality is the same. We go in and we play this game like it's our last one in Game 6."

C'S SUCCESS NOTHING BUT A TEASE

OPINION

@DannyPicard

It feels like the biggest tease of all time.

The Boston Celtics are one win away from defeating the Milwaukee Bucks in their first-round playoff series and advancing to the second round, where they'd be taking on the No. 3-seed Philadelphia 76ers. And regardless of all the praise Philly is getting, compared to all the hate that is being thrown at the Cleveland Cavaliers, I'd much rather avoid LeBron James in the second round if I were the Celtics.

Well, if the C's can beat the Bucks, then they'll avoid the Cavs until the Eastern Conference Finals. That is if either team even makes it that far.

Since it's not LeBron waiting for the Celtics in the second round, there's a more "wide open" feel to the East. As in, it's anybody's conference to win, and even though the Celtics are playing without two of their best players in Kyrie Irving and Gordon Hayward, they've still got a shot to make it exciting.

Those on the 76ers bandwagon will tell you differently. Philadelphia trusted the process and wound up beating the No. 6-seed Miami Heat in five games in the first round. Their confidence is through the roof. And some NBA "experts" believe their time could be now.

Don't get me wrong, the 76ers are good, and they're going to contend in the East for years to come. But I'm going to pump the brakes on some of the high praise that's been thrown their way in recent days.

In Vegas, the Sixers are now the favorite to win the NBA Championship, at +800. The favorite to win it all is Golden State, at -110, with Houston having the second-best odds, at +200.

Terry Rozier and Al Horford are helping hold things down without Kyrie Irving and Gordon Hayward. GETTY IMAGES

There's a feeling that, regardless of who they play in the second round, the 76ers will be expected to at least win that series and get to the conference finals. But the way I see it, that second-round series is still anybody's to take.

I expect the Celtics to close out their first-round series with the Bucks. Whether that happens in Game 6 or 7, I still expect it to happen. And then, I expect the C's — with home court advantage — to be a much tougher matchup for Philadelphia than Miami was, even without Irving.

But that's what makes this so exciting and disappointing at the same time. If we're currently giving the Celtics a shot to get to the Eastern Conference Finals — which I am — then imagine what this thing would look like if Irving was able to play? Or how about if both Irving and Hayward were healthy?

If Irving alone could suit up, then the Celtics would probably be exactly where Vegas has the 76ers right now: as the favorite to win the East, with the third-best odds to win the NBA Championship behind two Western Conference powerhouses in Golden State and Houston.

That would be an accurate portrayal of where the Celtics stand in the league when Irving is healthy and active. But he's not. And yet, there's still hope here in Boston that this team is going to make a run in the East.

Marcus Smart's electric return in Game 5 helped put the C's up 3-2 in their first-round series, which just adds to the "what-could-have-been" factor. It's also great to see youngsters like Jaylen Brown and Jayson Tatum having playoff success. When you see it though, you can't help but think, "Imagine what it would look like with Irving on the court with them?"

It's easy to tell someone to forget about the injuries and focus on what the team currently has. But I'm sorry, I just can't do that. Because I know what an Irving-led Celtics team would be capable of in the current playoff picture.

And whatever success they have without him, right now, will be nothing but a tease.
